THE LAW OF LABOR.

A Vigorous Discussion of It by the District Commissioners in Reply to the Laborers' Committee.The district commissioners yesterday replied to the memorial of the committee of workingmen relative to the employment of Italian laborers. They say they would gladly do anything that they might lawfully and fairly do to aid the committee and those it represents in their struggle, but do not find that there has been any official neglect of duty toward them, or that their rights have been violated.
The complaint of the laborers is summarized into one, that the price of labor is low, and is kept so by the influx of foreigners. They are reminded that the commissioners can neither fix the price of labor nor determine who may come to the district."You are aware," the letter continues, "that the American people, exclusive of the colored, are composed of many of those and the descendants of those who sought this land for liberty or to improve their condition in life, and who have made it their proud boast that here they have founded a welcome asylum for the oppressed and industrious poor of all lands, and that the price of labor here is low, and is kept so by the influx of foreigners. They
who may come to the district."The district commissioners further remind the committee that one year ago common labor was at the rate of $1.25 per day, and that it is now at the rate of $1.00. A great demand has raised the rate to $1.00, and the result is that labor is attracted here from other countries. This is a fact, and a monopoly is not to be feared.The proposition that the commissioners should exact a rigid performance of their contracts from employers of foreign labor is dismissed. Those laws not only in letter and spirit will be respected not only by the commissioners, but by all good citizens, who will not attempt their evasion, or nullification either directly or indirectly.The commissioners further remind the com-
